Clinton, Obama Clash in N.H.

Democratic front-runners argue over who will bring change

MANCHESTER, N.H. | Barack Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton clashed Sunday in the slushy New Hampshire homestretch, deriding each other's claims to be the true candidate of change. Clinton told Democratic voters they should elect "a doer, not a talker." Obama countered that his critics are stuck in the politics of the past.

At a raucous rally in a high school gymnasium in Nashua, Clinton skewered Obama for several votes he has cast in the Senate, such as his vote in favor of the Patriot Act and for energy legislation she described as "Dick Cheney's energy bill." She never mentioned Obama's name but left no doubt about who she was discussing. "You campaign in poetry; you govern in prose," Clinton said.

Obama, speaking at a packed Manchester theater, took issue with Clinton's criticism of him during Saturday's Democratic presidential debate.

"One of my opponents said we can't just, you know, offer the American people false hopes about what we can get done," he said. "The real gamble in this election is to do the same things, with the same folks, playing the same games over and over and over again, and somehow expect a different result," he said.

Tuesday's primary could be pivotal for the Democrats. Obama, the freshman Illinois senator, is hoping to sustain momentum from his caucus victory in Iowa, and Clinton is looking to recover from her stinging third-place finish. A CNN/WMUR poll released Saturday found Clinton and Obama tied at 33 percent each in the state, with John Edwards trailing at 20 percent. JIM KUHNHENN (AP)

Centenarian Vote Confused, Grouchy

The chairman of the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners visited a 114-year-old woman who registered to vote on Thursday. It was also her birthday, according to her family, who cite a family Bible as evidence of the day she was born. The woman had voted up until about 20 years ago, when she moved in with her grandson, and did not update her registration. She said little at the news conference, except to ask for more birthday cake and reassure herself that her grandson, 82, was nearby. That grandson said he doubted she would actually vote Feb. 5, as she doesn't know who any of the candidates are. (AP)

$2,000 DNA Test Solves Theft of $20

A Sheboygan Falls, Wis., man has been charged with sneaking into a toddler's bedroom and stealing $20 from a piggy bank while the 2-year-old girl slept. Authorities say DNA evidence linked Ryan A. Mueller, 30, to the crime that occurred Aug. 10 in Wilson. Authorities say the girl's mother walked into her daughter's bedroom and saw a man shaking the piggy bank as the girl slept. The man fled before police arrived, stealing the money but leaving the piggy bank. Authorities say blood was found on a window blind where the burglar had forced his way into the home. (AP)

HOUSING

Foxholes Are the New Urban Lofts

A Seattle man who was stopped for speeding nearly evaded state troopers by burrowing into soft ground along Highway 169 and covering himself with dirt and leaves. Trooper Jeff Merrill said the man, 20, hid for nearly an hour Wednesday and sent a text message to his girlfriend to pick him up. Officers caught him when he scrambled from his hole after the girlfriend drove by. "If he hadn't been in such a hurry to get out of there, he might have gotten away,"

Merrill said. "He was pretty stealthy, pretty committed." The chase began after a trooper clocked the man driving 20 miles per hour over the speed limit. He had outstanding arrest warrants for failing to appear in court on charges of marijuana possession, harassment and drunken driving. (AP/EXPRESS)

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., waves to supporters in Salem, N.H. McCain is polling ahead of Mitt Romney in New Hampshire.

McCain Predicts N.H. Win

Romney is battling for survival after defeat in caucus last week

SALEM, N.H. | An emboldened John McCain declared "I will win" on Sunday as Republican rival Mitt Romney scrambled to prevent another second-place finish in the frenzied final hours before the New Hampshire primary.

Mike Huckabee, who took first place in the Iowa caucus but trails in the nation's first primary, downplayed his own prospects in the state but said, "We're going to do better than expected."

Wide-open and intense, the race for the Republican nomination has gotten ever tighter. A pair of fresh polls showed McCain, the Arizona senator, slightly ahead of Romney, a former Massachusetts governor, two days before New Hampshire votes.

Romney, who pinned his presidential bid on using momentum from big wins in Iowa and New Hampshire, needs a victory to prove his candidacy isn't crippled after Iowa. McCain has put all his chips on a New Hampshire victory that would repeat his success here eight years ago.

"Whether it happens here in New Hampshire or whether it goes on to Michigan, I don't think the American people are going to line up behind John McCain," Romney said, calling his rival wrong on taxes and immigration.

Earlier Sunday, Romney conceded he was incorrect when he said the night before that none of his TV ads accuses McCain of favoring "amnesty" for backing an eventual path to citizenship for millions of illegal immigrants. Later as he campaigned, he called McCain's position "a form of amnesty" and added: "In my opinion, that is wrong."

McCain, for his part, tried to walk a careful line.

He didn't mention his opponent during a question-and-answer session at a Salem school, and he mostly resisted engaging in a back-and-forth with Romney when pressed by reporters.

McCain, did, however, repeat a claim against Romney that has almost become a standard part of his pitch: "He has changed his position on almost every major issue," McCain said at one point and then added: "That doesn't mean he's not a good person." LIZ SIDOTI (AP)

GM Plans Driverless Cars

Automaker says the self-directed vehicles may be on road by '18

DETROIT | Cars that drive themselves — even parking at their destination — could be ready for sale within a decade, General Motors Corp. executives say.

GM, parts suppliers, university engineers and other automakers all are working on vehicles that could revolutionize short- and long-distance travel. And Tuesday at the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas, GM Chief Executive Rick Wagoner will devote part of his speech to the driverless vehicles.

"This is not science fiction," said Larry Burns, GM's vice president for research and development.

The most significant obstacles facing the vehicles could be human rather than technical: government regulation, liability laws, privacy concerns and people's passion for controlling the wheel.

Much of the technology already exists for vehicles to take the wheel, and the automation could dramatically improve life on the road, reducing crashes and congestion.

If people are interested.

"Now the question is: What does society want to do with it?" Burns said. "You're looking at these issues of congestion, safety, energy and emissions. Technically, there should be no reason why we can't transfer to a totally different world."

He said the company plans to test driverless car technology by 2015 and have cars on the road around 2018.

Sebastian Thrun, co-leader of the Stanford University team that finished second in a Pentagon-sponsored 60-mile race of driverless cars in November, said GM's goal is technically attainable. But he said he wasn't confident cars would appear in showrooms within a decade.

Rescue teams search a neighborhood in Fernley, Nev., on Saturday after a canal ruptured from rainfall and flooded the town.

Icy Floodwaters Cripple Nev. Town

Canal levee crumbles after heavy rainfall, damaging 400 homes

FERNLEY, NEV. | Hundreds of homes sat in as much as 8 feet of water Sunday following a canal rupture as freezing weather spread sheets of ice over yards and streets, hindering efforts to get the water to drain away.

As many as 400 homes were damaged when the canal's bank gave way following heavy rainfall produced by the storm system that had piled snow as much as 11 feet deep in the Sierra Nevada.

Thousands of customers had been blacked out in three states, and many of those in California could remain in the dark for days because the storm ripped down nearly 500 miles of power lines, utility officials said Sunday.

Six snowmobilers and two skiers were reported missing in heavy snow in the mountains of southern Colorado, and one hiker was missing in snow-covered mountains in Southern California. At least three deaths were blamed on the storm.

The irrigation canal failure at Fernley released a wave of frigid water into the town on Saturday.

"In 10 minutes, the entire backyard was completely flooded. It was just nothing but water," said Fernley resident Kristin Watson.

The canal was temporarily repaired by late in the day, but as much as a square mile of the town was still under water at least 2 feet deep Sunday as ice impeded drainage. MARTIN GRIFFITH (AP)

Georgian President Wins 2nd Term

With about 53 percent of vote, pro-Western leader claims close race

TBILISI, GEORGIA | Mikhail Saakashvili won a second term as Georgia's president Sunday in an election that thousands of opposition protesters denounced as fraudulent, threatening instability in this former Soviet republic.

For the pro-Western Saakashvili, the prospect of unrest is an ironic echo of the mass demonstrations that swept him into office four years ago as a champion of democracy.

An observer mission from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe gave the election a mixed assessment, calling it a significant step for democracy while pointing to violations. Russia sharp-

Pakistan: No American Forces Allowed on Soil

ISLAMABAD, PAKISTAN | Pakistan reiterated that it will not let American forces hunt al-Qaeda and Taliban militants on its soil, after a news report said the Bush administration was considering expanding U.S. military and intelligence operations into Pakistan's tribal regions.

The Foreign Ministry dismissed as "speculative" a story in the New York Times saying President Bush's top security officials discussed a proposal Friday to deploy U.S. troops to pursue militants along the Pakistan-Afghanistan border.

"We are very clear. Nobody is going to be allowed to do anything here," said Maj. Gen. Waheed Arshad, the top spokesman for Pakistan's army. SADAQAT JAN (AP)

Bomber Kills 11 at Iraqi Army Fest

Suicide attacker strikes as civilians give flowers to soldiers in Baghdad

BAGHDAD | Three Iraqi soldiers threw themselves on a suicide attacker wearing an explosives vest at an Army Day celebration Sunday — an act of heroism the U.S. said likely prevented many more deaths. Iraqi police said at least 11 people were killed in the blast, the deadliest in a series of bombings in Baghdad.

One of the attacks in the capital killed an American soldier — one of two U.S. deaths announced on Sunday.

Shortly before the bomber struck the Army Day festivities, about two dozen Iraqi soldiers were standing outside the offices of a local non-governmental agency pushing for unity in Iraq. The troops, their AK-47 rifles raised in the air, chanted pro-army slogans and a common anti-insurgent taunt: "Where are the terrorists today?"

Associated Press photographer Hadi Mizban was about five yards away from the suicide attacker when he blew himself up.

"The blast happened as civilians were giving flowers to soldiers and sticking them in the muzzles of their guns," said Mizban, an Iraqi national. "It was a jubilant scene."

Afterward, he said, the street was littered with bodies, weapons and shoes. Dazed soldiers and policemen carried their bloodied colleagues to nearby pickup trucks that whisked them to a hospital.

"There was a severed head on the street, and some of the soldiers that I was photographing earlier were dead," Mizban said.

Among the dead were four police officers and three Iraqi soldiers, police said. BRADLEY BROOKS (AP)

Israeli Fuel Cuts Affect Gaza Strip

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP | With winter deepening, Gazans will be forced to live without electricity for eight hours per day because Israel has cut fuel supplies to the territory's only electric plant in half, Gaza's top energy official warned Sunday.

back was to nudge Palestinians to call on militants to stop their daily rocket attacks on southern Israel. But Gazans charged they have become the target of unfair punishment. Ten human rights groups have taken that argument to the Israeli Supreme Court. (AP)

Jerusalem Readies for Bush's Visit

City is spending nearly $400K for cleanup, security personnel

JERUSALEM | With hundreds of hotel rooms booked and municipal crews unfolding red, white and blue flags, Jerusalem is getting ready for its highest-profile visitor in years: President Bush.

Jerusalemites are accustomed to waiting in traffic jams as convoys of black sedans shuttle visiting dignitaries around the city, the seat of Israel's government. But Bush, who arrives for three days beginning Wednesday, constitutes a VIP of a different order.

Jerusalem is spending nearly $400,000 to spruce itself up for the visit, said Jacob Avishar, the city official in charge of coordinating preparations. Garbage teams are in a furious race to clean the city's often dusty streets and walls tagged with spray paint, he said.

More than 10,500 police officers and security personnel will be deployed to protect Bush and keep order — more than one-third of Israel's entire police force, according to spokesman Micky Rosenfeld. "There will be so much security, nobody will be able to get anywhere near the president," Rosenfeld said.

The security personnel will include snipers, bomb-sniffing dogs and bodyguards, according to police officials. The operation, dubbed "Clear Skies," will cost Israel $25,000 for every hour Bush is in the country, Israel Radio said.

Flights in and out of Israel's only international airport, Ben Gurion, will be suspended around the time Bush lands. Bush will fly by helicopter to Jerusalem.

The choppers will be flown in from the U.S. on Air Force cargo planes, along with armored limousines — complete with District of Columbia license plates — and vans filled with high-tech communications gear. MATTI FRIEDMAN (AP)

D.C. Flood Zone May Grow

Proposed FEMA maps could tighten building codes for broad area

New flood zone maps proposed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency could result in mandatory flood insurance and stricter building codes for a huge swath of downtown D.C., according to a presentation at a planning board last week.

The maps show a proposed new flood zone that is several blocks wide and extends in a broad crescent from the Lincoln Memorial to Fort McNair, in southwest Washington.

The area would include Federal Triangle, much of the National Mall to the base of Capitol Hill, and a large section of southwest Washington west of South Capitol Street.

The proposed changes were unveiled last fall but have not been widely publicized, community planner Michelle Desiderio said at a National Capital Planning Commission meeting Thursday.

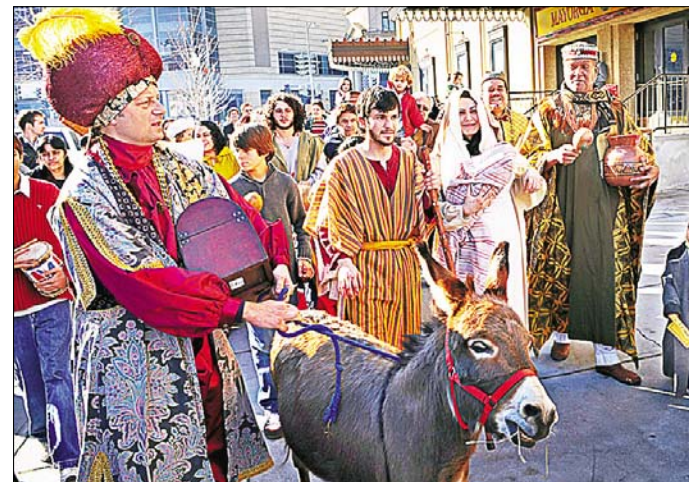

"The proposed floodplain map modifications ... may have a potentially adverse impact on federal operations and private businesses within the nation's capital," Marcel C. Acosta, the commission's acting executive director wrote in a letter Thursday to Tim Karikari, a D.C. Department of the Environment official who is the city's designated contact on the issue.

The maps would dramatically expand what is called the 100-year flood zone, within which flood insurance often is required and more stringent building codes may exist. The flood maps haven't been updated since 1985, and the hazard zone then was far less extensive.

St. Mary's Uses History to Rebuild

Lost Catholic church is being reconstructed to reflect 1667 look

ST. MARY'S CITY, MD. | The Historic St. Mary's City museum is using a once-buried foundation and other clues to rebuild a lost Catholic church that was built around 1667 and dismantled soon after.

The outdoor museum at the site of Maryland's first Colonial capital has spent about $2 million on the project so far. Construction began in 2002.

Historians have been learning about the church since the 1930s, when archaeologists found a foundation in the shape of a Latin cross.

Other clues include fragments of plaster and glass found nearby, a wooden tabernacle traced to a prominent family of Catholic settlers, and mention of a brick chapel in the writings of one of Maryland's Colonial governors.

The museum says the reconstructed church will be a monument to a time when Maryland led the Colonies in religious tolerance.

The museum is governed by the Historic St. Mary's City Commission, a panel of local historians and professionals appointed by the governor.

Gaston Chabolla, 15, searches for CDs at a music store Dec. 20 in Los Angeles. Major recording labels, which have been long criticized for being too slow in adapting to changes, are under pressure to find new ways to get fans to pay for music.

Music industry seeks new ways to reach download-era buyers

LOS ANGELES | When you're not inclined to give your product away for free, make your customers believe they're getting something for nothing.

That's the thinking behind some of the offerings music fans may see this year as the recording industry scrambles to offset losses from plunging CD sales and find new sources of revenue when many consumers simply download music for free.

Among the business models music fans are likely to see more of: music subscriptions bundled with the price of Internet access, and services like Nokia Corp.'s upcoming Comes With Music, which would give users of select mobile phones a year's worth of unlimited access to music for no extra charge.

Major recording labels, long criticized for being too slow in adapting to changes brought by the Internet over the last decade, are under pressure to explore new ways to get fans to pay for music, leading to more choices for consumers.

Consumers may also see a bigger push this year for CD singles, dubbed "ringles," that include mobile phone ringtones and other digital content, said Kevin Milligan, Virgin Megastore North America's vice president of product and merchandising.

"There's a lot of experimentation going on," said Jim Donio, president of the National Association of Recording Merchandisers.

"Everyone is looking for a formula that will provide healthy growth for the industry, which I believe will come." ALEX VEIGA (AP)

Wikipedia Goes Searching

Online encyclopedia launches search engine technology

NEW YORK | The founder of Wikipedia says taking the online encyclopedia's collaborative approach into the field of search won't dethrone Google Inc. or another major search engine — at least not soon.

After months of talk and a few weeks of invitation-only testing, Wikia Search is to open to the general public this week.

Wikipedia founder Jimmy Wales says his goal is to let volunteers improve search technology collectively, the way Wikipedia lets anyone add or change entries, regardless of expertise.

"That reduces the sort of bottleneck of two or three firms really controlling the flow of search traffic," said Wales, chairman of Wikia Inc., the for-profit venture behind the search project.

Wales said the project would launch with about 50 million to 100 million Web pages indexed, a fraction of the billions available with major search engines.

Players say the lessons from this season go deeper than winning

REDSKINS | Sean Taylor's father left Redskins Park with a Joe Gibbs book tucked under his arm and an appreciation for all that has been accomplished in the name of his son.

"It's priceless," Pedro Taylor said. "Life is priceless, but when you give love and you receive it back, it's amazing. And we just say thank you."

Sunday was wrap-up day for the Redskins, featuring the team meeting that always follows the last game of the season.

There was the usual assortment of great performances, close wins, agonizing losses, great catches, lousy throws and questionable calls over the last four months, but this Redskins season will be remembered first and foremost for No. 21. It was seen everywhere on helmets, jerseys, T-shirts and hats — Santana Moss even created a hand gesture that spelled "21" — all in memory of the said. "We lost a teammate, we lost a friend, and I think you really understand how important family is, how important it is not to take anything for granted."

Pedro Taylor spoke to the Redskins the day after his son died, urging them to win because that's what his son would have wanted. The players took it as a rallying cry to "Win for Sean" and embarked on a mission to do just that, climbing from 5-7 to 9-7 before a 35-14 loss to the Seahawks in the NFC wild-card round.

MOVING ON

A few key players in the Redskins organization may not be back:

- CB Shawn Springs, an area native, will count $5 million against the cap next year.
- Backup QB Todd Collins, who led the team to four straight wins, will be a free agent.
- The most significant question mark is Gibbs, though the coach has repeatedly said he will return.

"I'm feeling like the season ended too early," running back Clinton Portis said. "But I think there was something greater maybe this season than winning the Super Bowl. You win Super Bowls, your team splits up and goes their separate ways. From what this team went through and endured this year, I doubt if anybody will ever split up and go their separate ways. I think there was a bond formed that will last forever." JOSEPH WHITE (AP)

Giants Continue Road Dominance

Manning methodically picks apart the Bucs in his 1st playoff victory

REDSKINS | The New York Giants' rousing road show powered through Tampa Bay. Now it heads to the only place where it flopped: Dallas.

The Giants moved to 8-1 away from home with a dominating 24-14 NFC wild-card playoff victory over Tampa Bay on Sunday. New York has won every road game since falling in its season opener against the Cowboys, and it gets a chance to diminish that blemish in a much bigger matchup next Sunday.

"We love playing there; we love going down to Dallas," Eli Manning said. "There are no secrets."

Tampa Bay QB Jeff Garcia, right, is drilled as he throws during the fourth quarter.

As for concerns that the Giants (11-6) left too much of themselves on the field futilely trying to stop New England's perfect season, well, forget it. After a lackluster first quarter, New York bullied the NFC South champions, who lost three of their last four regular-season games.

It was the first postseason win for Manning, who efficiently outplayed his counterpart, Jeff Garcia. Manning went 20-for-27 for 185 yards, with almost all the damage coming after a forgettable opening period in which New York had minus-2 yards of offense. (AP)

Chargers Finally Get Playoff Win

NFL | Well, wouldn't you know it? The Chargers can win in the playoffs.

Thirteen long years after their last postseason victory, the Chargers finally came to life late in the second half Sunday to beat the Tennessee Titans 17-6 in an AFC wild-card game, snapping a streak of four straight postseason losses that dated back to 1994.

The Titans bottled up Tomlin-son, the two-time NFL rushing champion, and dared quarterback Philip Rivers to beat them.

Rivers

The second-year starter did just that, throwing a 25-yard touchdown pass to Vincent Jackson late in the third quarter that gave San Diego its first lead at 10-6. Rivers was 19-of-30 for 292 yards, with one interception. (AP)

Ryan Interviews for Ravens Job

RAVENS | Rex Ryan made his bid to become the Ravens' third head coach Sunday, interviewing for several hours with the team's search committee.

The popular defensive coordinator was the fourth candidate to meet with the Ravens, after Colts assistant head coach Jim Caldwell, Dallas Cowboys assistant head coach

Tony Sparano and Cowboys offensive coordinator Jason Garrett.

Ryan, 45, and the rest of the coaching staff were fired last week along with coach Brian Billick by team owner Steve Bisciotti following a 5-11 season. Ryan is also expected to interview with the Falcons and the Dolphins this week. (AP)

Title Teams Look for Justification

Buckeyes and Tigers both have something to prove in BCS game

COLLEGE FOOTBALL | Redemption and validation.

Top-ranked Ohio State enters the BCS national championship game against LSU searching for redemption, hoping to bury the memories of an embarrassing loss in last year's title game.

"As much as you try to forget about it, there's no way of forgetting about it," Ohio State's Donte Johnson said. "I can close my eyes and go through that game like I'm still there."

The second-ranked Tigers come into Monday night's showdown at the Superdome looking for validation, trying to prove they were indeed the team most deserving of a chance to play the Buckeyes.

"I really feel it was our destiny to be here," LSU's Early Doucet said. "For things to go the way they went ... it all fell into place the way it did, and I just think it was meant to be."

That's a good theory. How else to explain how two teams that lost their second-to-last games are playing for the national title?

The winner will become the first school to win two titles since the BCS began in 1998. The Buckeyes won it in 2002, then lost 41-14 to Florida as a prohibitive favorite in last year's championship game.

LSU won the BCS title in 2003, beating Oklahoma right here in New Orleans, the Tigers' home 90 miles south of Baton Rouge.

have been two of the nation's elite programs over the past six seasons; the Buckeyes have won 66 games and the Tigers 63. Yet, there's been little talk about dynasties or a place in history going into this game.

The winner will get a crystal football and the title of BCS national champion, but the debate over which team is truly the best in the country will continue, especially by fans of USC and Georgia.

"I couldn't think of a better way to end the college season than 1 playing 2 for the right to be 1," Miles said. RALPH D. RUSSO (AP)

Caron Butler slams home two of his 33 points on an uncontested, second-half dunk.

After Reaming, Wizards Cruise

After poor first half, Jordan lectures team about playing with fire

WIZARDS | The Washington Wizards won their second straight game by more than 20 points, but coach Eddie Jordan wasn't happy.

At halftime of Washington's 108-86 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics on Sunday, Jordan lectured the team.

"We're not that good," Jordan told them.

Washington raced to a 31-17 first-quarter lead, while Seattle missed 10 of its first 13 shots. Perhaps the Wizards were convinced they were about to win again easily, as they did in Milwaukee on Friday night. Jordan wasn't.

"We're not Boston. We're not Detroit. I wanted to put reality on the table," Jordan said.

Seattle never led. The closest the SuperSonics got was 43-42 with 3:02 to play in the half. The Wizards led 52-46 at the half and let Seattle play with them through most of the third quarter before outscoring them 32-9 to take a 106-78 lead with 2:58 to play.

Caron Butler led Washington with 33 points, his third game of 30 or more points. It was the first time the Wizards won by more than 20 twice in a row since 2004.

Washington is 17-15 but hasn't beaten a team with a winning record since a Dec. 1 victory over Toronto. For the Wizards to prove they're more than mediocre, Jordan and some of his veteran players know they need to see something more.

"When you're young, you need the least amount of distractions possible," said Antawn Jamison, who had 21 points and 12 rebounds. "We're not satisfied with the growth. This is a veteran team. This is not a young team where you can just go out and play ball. Before the game, we need those guys focused."

"We can ill-afford to take any games off." (AP)

VALUABLE 'TREASURE': Nicolas Cage's "National Treasure: Book of Secrets" spent its third weekend on top at the box office, raking in $20.2 million since Friday and $171 million total. "I Am Legend" held steady at second, and "Juno" came in third.

LIVE FOR TODAY: Jack Nicholson and Morgan Freeman try to get all their kicks in before they croak in "The Bucket List."

Feisty Old Men

Jack, Morgan knock working together off 'The Bucket List'

DUO | Back in the early 1970s, Jack Nicholson was an emerging young Hollywood star and Morgan Freeman was performing in the groundbreaking children's show, "The Electric Company." Both went on to have extraordinarily successful Hollywood careers.

Nicholson earned 12 Oscar nominations, more than any other actor in history, taking home three trophies. Freeman earned four nominations and won once.

Yet in all their years of moving in the same circles, they never worked together.

Now in their golden years, the Easy Rider and the Easy Reader are finally paired in the heartwarming buddy comedy "The Bucket List." In it, they play two terminally ill patients who decide to fulfill their biggest dreams before they kick the proverbial bucket.

Nicholson plays a financial tycoon who has built a billion-dollar health care empire but is divorced from his wife and estranged from his daughter. Freeman plays a blue-collar family man who never achieved material success but is fairly content with his lot in life. They wind up sharing a hospital room.

When Nicholson's Edward catches Freeman's Carter jotting down his "bucket list" — a collection of all the things he always wanted to do, see and experience — the impulsive billionaire suggests they actually do it. Soon they are off on Edward's private jet, flying to the Taj Mahal and the Serengeti, getting tattoos, hang gliding, and generally living life to its fullest before the final curtain falls.

It was Freeman who suggested casting Nicholson to director Rob Reiner.

"Jack's been on my bucket list for a long time," says Freeman, sitting alongside his co-star to promote the movie. "I've known Jack since I saw him in 'Easy Rider.' I've seen just about everything he's ever done."

"We were acquaintances of longstanding," adds Nicholson in his usual gravelly voice. "We weren't so distinguished when we first met."

The actors, both 70, are a little grayer and thicker around the middle than they used to be in their salad days, yet they maintain a quick wit and an easy repartee.

"Morgan and I have known each other from a distance for a long time," says Nicholson. "We'd always known we wanted to work together. And when I heard he was going to do this, that's pretty much all it took for me." ANGELA DAWSON (ENTERTAINMENT NEWS WIRE)

New Face on the Music Scene

Kate Voegelé works on becoming a pop staple early in 2008

NEWBIE | Sometimes things are better the second time around. So it seems in Kate Voegelé's case, when she rereleases her MySpace Records debut, "Don't Look Away," Jan. 22. The move comes as the 21-year-old singer-songwriter transitions from the stage to the small screen.

Voegelé scores her first acting role as the musician Mia on the popular CW series "One Tree Hill," starting with its Jan. 22 episode.

"I felt like the audience [for the show] is my audience," Voegelé says. "One Tree Hill" has always been an awesome vehicle for new artists. Plus, now there's this whole idea that art imitates life."

On the show, one of the main characters discovers Mia and later signs her to a record deal. Voegelé will be heard playing songs like the single "Only Fooling Myself" on the show.

Voegelé plans to use the CW's "One Tree Hill" to get her songs heard.

The young performer has spent time touring with artists like John Mayer and Ben Lee, and is in the midst of planning a full tour itinerary surrounding the set's rerelease, which will feature a new album cover that will more closely reflect her role on "One Tree Hill." Copies of the album — originally released in May 2007 — sold through Target will also include three bonus acoustic versions of previously released tracks. KATIE HASTY (BILLBOARD)

If the Bombs Fell Away

Jonathan Schell's book outlines a path to a nuclear-free world

NUKES | You may say Jonathan Schell is a dreamer, but he's not the only one.

Heck, the nuclear abolitionist is in good company.

As Schell notes in his new book, "The Seventh Decade," Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev jointly proclaimed that a "nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought," and, with the goal of abolition in sight, set a course for decisive cuts in their arsenals at 1986's Reykjavik Summit. (The negotiations ended in an impasse over the United States' quest for a missile defense shield.)

Schell

Twenty-two years after Reykjavik, the great powers maintain their arsenals, lesser powers pursue the bomb doggedly and furtively, and the specter of a mushroom cloud looms over America's cities at least as menacingly as it has for the previous seven decades.

To read an in depth conversation with author Jonathan Schell about the eradication of nukes, visit our Web site, readexpress.com | ONLINE NOW

Schell's book, subtitled "The New Shape of Nuclear Danger," is rather slim, but it covers a lot of ground, tracing the path of nuclear proliferation and its attendant theories in the years since the U.S. rained hell on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

"Seventh Decade" reads like course material from an international relations class: It is crammed with information, clear-eyed and nicely written, though somewhat dry.

Schell, a frequent contributor to the Nation and an erstwhile professor at several august universities, gives Reagan a lot of credit and believes American administrations since the Cold War's end have failed to pursue policies capable of slowing the bomb's proliferation. He explains these policies — and the theories girding them — in great detail and ends by outlining a path to a nuclear weapon-free world.

The author contends that if American families want freedom from fear of annihilation, they must relinquish the option to nuke the world. As Schell notes, "Nuclear weapons produce more nuclear weapons."

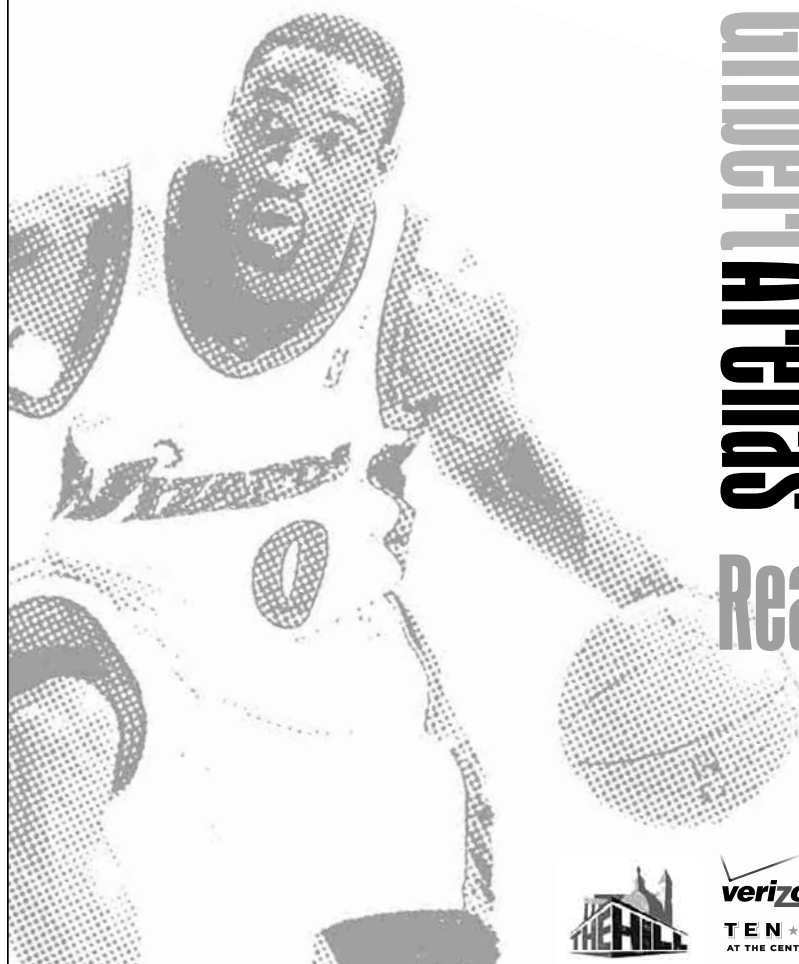

"During the Cold War, people understood that nuclear danger was the most urgent and the greatest of the dangers that faced the human species," Schell said. "That remains true today, though the shape of the danger is different."

"We have fewer weapons, but they're in the hands of more people, so there's a greater likelihood of a comparatively small nuclear event and a lesser danger of a world-ending one," he continued. "But since the end of the Cold War, people have let that slip out of their minds. We could get a very rude wake-up call."

THE SHOW MIGHT GO ON? Golden Globe-nominated actors are expected to snub the awards in support of striking Hollywood writers, the actors union said Friday. NBC, however, said it was sticking to its plans to air the Jan. 13 ceremony.

All Danced Out

Only reality TV could make an ancient art gimmicky and tired

SERIOUSLY? | Scant weeks after the conclusion of "Dancing with the Stars," the spinoff series "Dance War: Bruno vs. Carrie Ann" (8 p.m., ABC) arrives. That's not good. The popular reality shows that retain their audiences appreciate the old adage "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." "American Idol" airs but once a year, to tremendous ratings.

Can two "Dancing with the Stars" judges carry their own show and engage viewers and contestants as leaders of their own performance teams? Or will viewers long for the days when they said (or in Bruno's case, shouted) a few words and held up a card with a number?

If prime-time history is any guide, a change or expansion of such roles is not necessarily welcome. Tim Gunn's graduation from the avuncular professor on "Project Runway" to the host of his own fashion series was not an entertaining step-up.

The most important thing about this new series is its timing. Airing a week before the debut of "American Idol," it hopes to hook as many viewers as possible before the arrival of Simon, Paula and Randy. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

War-torn just 10 years ago, the province is now tourist-friendly

Kosovo. Off the beaten path? No doubt. Is it safe? That's a fair enough question to ask about a place where a 1998-99 war between ethnic Albanian insurgents and Serbian troops killed 10,000 people, and where ethnic strife still occasionally erupts.

The answer: an unequivocal yes. About 16,000 NATO peacekeepers patrol the province, which is roughly the size of Connecticut, and visitors can count on warm Balkan hospitality.

Pristina, Kosovo's gritty capital, is the most logical starting point, if only because a handful of airlines fly there daily.

Its tiny airport is the first clue that you're about to alight in what was, just a decade ago, a rough place. Military jets and helicopters line the tarmac.

Don't be put off by Pristina's drab apartment blocks and trash-strewn streets. The city is working hard to clean up its act, and tucked among the tenements are some of south-eastern Europe's most lively cafes and bars. Demographically, it's much like Dublin: half the population is under the age of 25.

This is one place where Americans are practically worshipped rather than reviled, at least among the province's independence-seeking ethnic Albanian majority.

In 1999, U.S. forces led the NATO air war that broke the late Yugo-slav leader Slobodan Milosevic's grip on Kosovo.

Washington has been a staunch supporter of statehood. That helps explain why the capital's main street is Bill Clinton Boulevard.

The best of Kosovo is a two-hour drive to the west, where the settlement of Pec rises from the foothills of the craggy range that forms the border with Montenegro.

Roughly the same distance to the south, the city of Prizren offers a glimpse of remarkably unspoiled and intact Turkish baths and other Ottoman Empire architecture.

The Decani Monastery, a UNESCO World Heritage Site tucked in a verdant valley below pine-studded cliffs, is not to be missed. Conflict of any kind seems out of place here, even though as recently as last spring, a rocket damaged Decani's outer wall. No one was hurt, and the young 20-something monk tending the chapel was nonplussed. He's seen worse and expects better.

"NATO is here," he says. "But it is God who will protect us."

Networking for Moms

Society

Women reach out to each other for tips about motherhood

The pickup lines are the same. But they're delivered with a mommy twist.

"Do you come here [the playground] often?" "Do you want to come to my place, or shall we go to yours?"

Mothers of young children, who a few years ago may have been looking for Mr. Right in a bar, now are seeking Mrs. Right and her kids in between the swings and the slides at the local playground.

Women also are going online to find moms who match their personality and interests, much like singles use an online dating service.

"You scope 'em out," says Magalie Belanger, 31, about prospective mommy-friends in Helena, Mont. "You see how they deal with their children and with yours."

It's like dating, but the dates are with other moms and their children. While the kids play — hopefully, without tantrums or biting — the moms are free to talk about the things they have in common, from the lofty subjects of religion and politics to the more practical topics of teething and diaper rash.

"[Women] want someone else who is going through the same thing," says Drury Sherrod, a Los Angeles social psychologist who studies friendship.

Often, that can mean seeking out other women in the same trimester of pregnancy or whose children are similar in age, he says.

Kate Harmon, 41, of Concord, Mass., recalls how 10 years ago she fell into the perfect support group while her husband was a graduate student in Boston. Three of the four moms gave birth in the same week, and the fourth a month later.

"None of us knew what the heck we were doing," Harmon says. "The first year was fabulous. You had this tiny, little apartment ... you could just squoosh in and hang out."

Such groups, primarily for stay-at-home moms or those who work part time, help both new and seasoned moms on many levels.

"Always, there's somebody at that next milestone ahead of you," says Harmon. "You could say, 'What's going to happen next?'"

"You either felt like you were an expert — and you only went through it a week or two earlier — or you thought, 'Wow, they know a lot. This is great,'" she says.

Moms tend to hook up in one of two ways: They can go it alone, and find like-minded moms at the playground, in their neighborhood, or through their children's schools and sports. Or they can network through national groups like the Moms Club, Mothers & More, newcomers clubs and Matchingmoms.org.

Belanger met her tight-knit group of mom friends through the Moms Club of Helena.

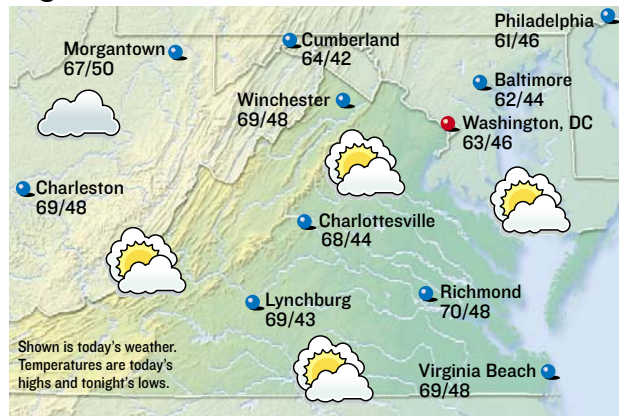

"I knew if I didn't have a club, I'd be stuck stalking people at the playground," she says.

Fashion Forward

Curators want public to blog about fashion

What do you really think of John Galliano's deconstructed Christian Dior ballgown or a human-hair top hat by Odile Gilbert? Inquiring curators want to know.

Along with the important pieces by Madame Gres, Charles Frederick Worth and Yves Saint Laurent, a new exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum of Art's Costume Institute prominently features a series of flat-screen computers for people to blog on the spot about what they are seeing.

"Blog.mode: Addressing Fashion" embraces and exploits the immediacy of fashion. Fashion, unlike almost any other form of art, is an expression of a zeitgeist and judged in that context, explains curator in charge Harold Koda.

This exhibition is supposed to encourage a more thoughtful reflection of a particular garment on its merits, not whether it's trendy or can get a jaded crowd buzzing.

"We're hoping for high-minded interpretation, connoisseurship beyond, 'How would it look on me?'" Koda says.

He'd also like to log some personal stories.

"What we're hoping for is that it [the blog] surprises us," Koda says.

Certainly, some items awaiting comments are worth talking about. The deconstructed Dior was part of Galliano's 2005 collection that peeled back the layers of the classic New Look silhouette for all to see — hip pads and all.

Another Galliano for Dior, this one a stunning red dress from 2000, was donated by Annette de la Renta, wife of designer Oscar de la Renta, because her husband thought the world should see the manifestation of Galliano's creativity.

A dress from Rei Kawakubo's fall 2007 Comme

blog.mode: addressing fashion

des Garçons collection appears to be covered in Minnie Mouse gloves. Alexander McQueen's "oyster dress" inspired by a shipwreck in the Amazon is accompanied by text that says when the chiffon-and-organza extravaganza hit the runway in 2003 it was labeled by critics as "wearable and desirable fashion."

Desirable? Yes. Wearable? Not if you have to move.

“We're hoping for high-minded interpretation, connoisseurship beyond, 'How would it look on me?'"

HAROLD KODA, MET CURATOR

All the items featured have been acquired by the Met since 2000, and this loosely themed exhibition gives the museum a chance to show off.

Things are added to the collection for a variety of reasons, explains curator Andrew Bolton: Some are rare; some are examples of incredible craftsmanship. Some are highlighted because of their technical ingenuity or for their originality, while others are seen as examples of a designer's most influential work.

The Worth pink satin gown and train from 1888 was something Bolton and Koda had their eye on for a while. It went up for auction a few years ago and then they acquired it from a dealer. It complements the collection because Worth is considered the father of fashion's current system of seasonal styles, plus this particular dress was made for an American woman whose lineage is traced to George Washington.

Some items, including 1920s' thigh-high boots by Maniatis Bottier, probably were overlooked in their day but now have historical significance, Bolton notes. "Look at those high heels — the stiletto came 20 years later. This is the missing link between 19th century shoes and the stiletto."

Unlike most Met fashion exhibits which keep text explanations to a minimum, this time there are extensive descriptions for each item so bloggers will have context to ponder.

The blog can also be accessed from computers outside the Met at Bblog.metmuseum.org/blogmode. SAMANTHA CRITCHELL (AP)

TV Update

Post TV columnist LISA DE MORAES was online Friday to discuss the return of the late-night shows, Conan's and Letterman's "strike beards," and Dick Clark on New Year's Eve.

I have a tremendous amount of respect for Dick Clark, but I just can't watch his New Year's Eve appearances anymore. Watching the man once known for his eternal youthfulness in his current condition just brings out all the depressing elements of the change to a new year. What will it take for Clark to relinquish this role?

I don't think he will do it willingly. On the one hand, I agree with you regarding the whole eternal youth/depressing thing. On the other hand, I don't want people who've had a stroke to be shut up in their homes so we don't have to look at them.

What's with Conan's hair? Every time he moves, it shakes all over the place. It looks like a local TV ad for a furniture store and the guy hawking the ad has the shaking hair syndrome.

What's up is he needs a haircut. And a shave. What's up with all the strike beards? They're horrifying. It's bad enough we had to muddle through this strike, but I'm supposed to look at that hairy growth for an hour every night?

Those Letterman writers have to be the laziest humans alive. Two months off, the eyes of the nation upon them and that's the best they could do?

Letterman's show was awful. It's as though Letterman wanted to level the playing field, what with his coming back with writers and Jay Leno having to come back without them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't make an example of yourself simply because you think things should be done your way. Fall back and let things take their course.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Quality control may prove a difficult issue throughout the day. You may be the only one you know who wants to improve what is already quite good.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You may bemissing a few pieces of the puzzle, but by day's end you'll have a very good idea of the situations you've adopted for yourself.
